Learning Communities consist of two courses linked together where you are with the same students in both classes, explore common themes, build partnerships with professors and peers, and participate in rewarding community engagement projects. Learning Communities are different from other classes in that they are scheduled back to back, usually in the same room, with the same students in both classes. The professors of each class work together to integrate material in ways that show the connections between the two courses. This makes the material more engaging, interactive, and easy to remember and retain.

“I feel more a member of the UVU community because of these classes. The small sizes allowed us to really get to know our teachers and get all our questions answered. The common students to both classes allowed me to get to know my classmates. I would say I have more friends and connections from this set of classes than in my 4 other classes combined. When I think back on this semester, at least, these will be the friends I think of. And, because the teachers were able to coordinate their lessons, we were able to learn everything in a more practical way.”
